SPRING 2021 NEWSLETTER

Interim Artistic Director

The Barnstormers Theatre board of directors is pleased and excited to welcome Joe Longthorne as Interim Artistic Director. Joe plans to honor the fine heritage of the theatre and bring a fresh perspective with diverse, socially relevant productions to our stage. The Barnstormers will be celebrating its 91st season this summer with an exciting lineup of performances, and patron health and safety in mind.

Joe's infectious enthusiasm, energy and extensive entrepreneurial background in theatrical management were the key drivers in the board's selection process. In addition, Joe's background in finance and experience in production, marketing, strategic planning, acting and equity negotiations bring a robust skill set to the theatre, ensuring The Barnstormers is positioned to be artistically relevant as we move forward.

"I am so very humbled and thrilled to be appointed interim artistic director of this historic American theater." said Joe. "I made my professional debut onstage at The Barnstormers Theatre in 2010 in a summer production of A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum, a production which also featured former artistic director, Cope Murray. I have quite literally grown up at BST over the years, personally and professionally. My predecessor Bob Shea, cast me in that first production of Forum, and my great task ahead is continuing the strong traditions of his wonderful stewardship, while envisioning a new path forward for the future of live theater in Tamworth and the White Mountains of New Hampshire."

Theatre Renovation Update

The Board of Directors established a fund to make significant repairs to the theatre in the fall of 2020. Given building maintenance is an ongoing challenge, the board also established a comprehensive maintenance plan listing specific repairs needed, prioritizing each repair, estimating cost and defining a projected timetable.

The facilities committee received quotes for roofing, electrical upgrades, structural and cosmetic repairs and after an in-depth review, awarded the bids to local contractors Addison Mason Builders and DW Electrical.

They removed the crumbling asphalt shingles and replaced them with metal roofing which will last about 40 years. They repaired and updated the electrical components, loading doors and walls on the east side of the building, and made some cosmetic improvements on the north east and southeast sides.

The electrical upgrades involved Eversource (their pole to the building) which should eliminate flickering onstage during performances and bring us into compliance with current electrical codes. The roof replacement will eliminate leaking in the box office, bathroom, lobby and stage areas — which will also eliminate the need to make annual repairs to the inside of the theatre. Ultimately, we went approximately 25% over budget due to some old-structural surprises.

We anticipate painting the exterior of the theatre after the summer season.

In partnership with the Tamworth History Center, we are building an outdoor stage for the first two shows. We are excited to bring live theatre back to the Village and are looking forward to creating a summertime buzz which will hopefully benefit the Tamworth business community as well.

Our Barnstormers

Brendan Proal: It was in the high school theatre program that I met Abby, and we had multiple opportunities to perform together, including scenes that would be nominated for national festivals and competitions. After high school I enrolled in the theatre program at Dean College and through them I was introduced to The Barnstormers. I had enough tech experience to spend the summer of 2018 in Tamworth as a carpenter. I returned in 2019, and Abby came as well. These two years became my most formative as a member of the theatre. I got to work with amazing directors and designers from all over, have conversations with actors from all types. I also had the opportunity to take small roles in shows such as Damn Yankees and The Man Who Came To Dinner, while taking larger roles at college such as Tom Wingfield in The Glass Menagerie and The Stage Manager in Our Town.

afternoons at Lake Chocorua, late night rehearsals in the Gilman, post-show bonfires, and learning from so many talented company members. One of my favorite shows at The Barnstormers was The Producers. In any Mel Brooks show, there is a constant theme of pure laughter from the moment you start rehearsal to the end of the run.

Abby Dwyer: I was that kid that was always fascinated by live performances. The choreography, the lights, the costumes, and the stories themselves drew me in so quickly I was taking dance classes from four years old and in theatrical performances as soon as I hit the fourth grade. I actually met Brendan in high school through the after school theatre program! From there I went on to study Theatre education at Bridgewater State university. While there, I performed in three musicals, a few straight plays, and three immersive productions, I was on the stage management team for two shows, and costume designed one. All the while, I was working in the scenic, prop, and costume shops, learning as much as possible. The summer after my junior year, I worked with the Weston Playhouse on six different shows as a costumes and wardrobe intern, and the next summer I worked at The Barnstormers Theatre!

The pandemic greatly affected my life this year, but I am so grateful that I was healthy and able to be a part of The Barnstormers community...even if it was over Zoom. I was lucky enough to escape NYC and come up to New Hampshire to spend the summer with my family. Although I was spending time at Lake Chocorua without my normal Barnstormers community, it was so refreshing to connect with the community through our online "Love Letters to The Barnstormers" series. I got to meet and work with company members that I have never performed with. I felt immediately connected to the entire community.

Becca Gottlieb: I have so many fond memories of my summers in Tamworth filled with joyous opening nights, Madeleine Maby: Getting to work with Jordan has been another gift The Barnstormers has given me. Getting to do what you love the most with the person you love the most is a rare opportunity. Plus, it's nice to be on the same schedule. Picking up coffees at The Other Store, running lines behind the barn, rehearsing, and then spending the evening making food at Gilman and talking about rehearsals and the play. That's pretty much my perfect day.

Jordan Reeves: Working with Madeleine at The Barnstormers has been a joy and blessing in our relationship. I'm also a director, mostly in New York City, and have directed my wife numerous times over the years. However, we had not had many opportunities to act on stage together. I am so thankful that The Barnstormers gave Madeleine and me a place to come together and perform with other artists and friends, for a community we truly care about. Over the last decade Tamworth, and the theatre, has been our summer home away from home.
